As I take a moment to compose this letter, I find myself clinging to a faint and perhaps unrealistic hope that the last remaining Allied Command post, which is still manned by a handful of determined American personnel alongside an even smaller contingent of resolute officers from the Republic of China, will somehow manage to send this correspondence through a diplomatic pouch to Hong Kong, ensuring it reaches you.
These officers, steadfast in their commitment, refuse to abandon their posts despite the overwhelming circumstances surrounding them, and it is this unwavering dedication that fuels my belief that my words might still find their way to you, bridging the distance and uncertainty that now separates us.

From my vantage point in the penthouse suite of the Mayfair Hospice and Garden, I gaze out through the cracked windows, observing the chaotic scene unfolding on the streets below with the presence of the Reds, Mao's Army, looms ominously at the gates, a stark reminder of the shifting tides of power.

Meanwhile, the once-proud Kuomintang, now reduced to desperation, has resorted to brazen acts of looting, scavenging for anything that might hold even a semblance of value amid the turmoil. The atmosphere is thick with tension as their abandoned and disoriented soldiers, driven by fear and confusion, indiscriminately fire upon any foreigner who dares to step outside, transforming the once vibrant streets into a perilous battlefield.

The juxtaposition of my sheltered view against the stark reality below serves as a haunting reminder of the fragility of safety in times of upheaval.

These are undeniably challenging times, yet I find a glimmer of hope in the meticulous plans devised by Seine, as we stand on the brink of our departure, just three days away.

To be completely honest, I am utterly in the dark regarding our destination, and as you are well aware, it is wise to refrain from probing the Seine with too many questions.
However, reflecting on our previous escapades, I have learned to trust in the process, as things often have a way of working out, leaving me with only a modicum of apprehension about the vessel that will carry us away.
My concerns are particularly heightened by the recent comments from Mister Daniel, the new bartender at the KitKat Gentleman's Lounge, who chuckled at the mention of our boat. He expressed his skepticism, suggesting that we would be fortunate to even leave the harbor, given that our supposed transport has spent the last decade as a seafood restaurant, and prior to that, it was a derelict war refugee from the First Great Industrial War, which the English had sold off for scrap.

Everything else seems to be running smoothly, with Mister Daniel consistently reassuring the staff of his strong connections with both factions. He frequently reminds us that the Reds have a penchant for enjoying drinks and engaging in flirtations with the attractive barmaids, which adds a light-hearted touch to our daily interactions.

Up to this point, he has proven to be a man of his word, as he has successfully arranged for each member of the KitKat staff to receive a special pass. This pass grants us the privilege of bypassing the numerous checkpoints that have been springing up throughout the town, allowing us to navigate our work environment with greater ease and less interruption.

Seine expressed his thoughts on the situation, suggesting that although Mister Daniel may possess certain connections, the unpredictable nature of an open city teeming with approximately eight million inhabitants complicates matters significantly.
With only a week's worth of food remaining in the once-bustling dockside warehouses, the stakes are alarmingly high.
Adding to the tension are the unsettling rumors circulating about the more extreme factions of the Kuomintang (KMT), who are allegedly planning to detonate the remaining food supplies as a final, desperate act of defiance before they disappear from the scene.

Reflecting on our initial meeting at the skid row pub back in 1915, where a simple disagreement over a bar tab led us to be unwittingly enlisted into the English Expeditionary Force, I can't help but admire Seine's knack for navigating through life's unpredictable challenges.
Throughout the years, he has consistently demonstrated an uncanny ability to assess situations and devise effective solutions, and now is certainly not the moment to doubt his judgment.

I have complete faith in his assessment that this weary old ferry boat, which has seen better days as a seafood restaurant, possesses the resilience to not only leave the harbor but also to remain buoyant long enough to transport us safely to our destination.
With Seine at the helm, I am reassured that we will weather whatever storms may come our way.
Observing that nearly all of our loyal, long-time patrons have either vanished or are steadfastly clinging to their beliefs, convinced that their ties to the impending Red Army will mirror the tumultuous times we faced during the Japanese invasion, I have found solace in creating a series of peculiar sketches that accompany this letter.

My hope is that you might be able to transform these illustrations into some much-needed financial support through a local art gallery or a small publishing house, as I anticipate that we will require additional resources, depending on the uncertain destination of our ferry boat.

The situation feels precarious, and I believe that these artistic expressions could serve as a lifeline, providing not only a means of survival but also conveniently located on Kotewall Road, not far from the recently reopened Foreign Correspondents' Club.

Interestingly, Claudie has been granted a full membership there, a rather curious turn of events considering it was facilitated by the counterfeit Havana Times journalist press cards we had fabricated for our press excursions to Italy and Manchukuo during the late 1920s and early 1930s. Go Figure?
